Re: Zoo Commissary Bid Tabulations

1. The following items came as lower bid for several zoo animal commissary items, but are actually different products, with different nutritional analysis, color/flavor presentation, and palatability. Food changes for all animals must be gradual, and to change these products would require (1) that we receive samples first to insure that animals will even accept the new product, (2) offer both products in variable amounts until the animal is completely consuming the new diet, and (3) maintain both products on the shelf until this process is complete. For some animals, this takes several months to a year or more and much food will be wasted or thrown away until the animals are completely consuming the new diet, with a possible need for increased budget costs. Also, vet staff and keeper staff will need to spend more time observing animals and weighing animals, to insure that lack of food consumption is not resulting in significant (10% or more) weight loss or health issues. Lastly, some animals (i.e., birds in free-flight aviary) cannot be observed or caught for weights, so we would be unable to track the progress and health impacts of dietary changes. Changing the base product of animal diets is not a task undertaken lightly, and carries potential health risks, increased food wastage, and increased staff time usage. These concerns are particularly important for birds and the health risk is increased for these species. Since there is no medical or behavioral reason to make these dietary changes, I strongly recommend that we continue with the following products:

Current product: Mazuri Small Bird Maintenance ($24.35/bag). The listed alternate diet (Zupreem Avian Maintenance 9250; $14.20/bag) is no longer available. The manufacturer suggests replacing it with Zupreem Avian Maintenance Natural diets.

Current product: Mazuri Parrot Maintenance, 56A8 ($24.35/bag). The listed alternate diet (Zupreem Avian Maintenance 9350; $14.20/bag) is no longer available. The manufacturer suggests replacing it with Zupreem Avian Maintenance Natural diets.

2. For the following products, we would accept them as substitutions, provided that the animals accept the new diet over time. These species are sometimes easier to switch to new products, and their food consumption can be readily monitored; we do not currently have the ability to track weights without chemical immobilization. We would require the ability to purchase both the current and replacement product simultaneously in order to make a gradual diet change. If the animals do not consume the new diet and cannot be switched to the new product, we would require the option of continuing to purchase the old products.

Current product: Mazuri Omnivore chow, 5635 ($26.63/bag). Replacement product: Zupreem Omnivore 6995 ($11.71/bag).

Current product: Mazuri Primate Maintenance, 5MA2 ($17.09/bag). Replacement product: Zupreem Primate 6985 ($11.78/bag).

3. For the following food item, we would accept the replacement product. The replacement product appears superior in providing lower dietary iron. Since high levels of dietary iron is associated with irreversible liver damage in many zoo birds and mammal species, we need to feed a palatable, nutritional product that is as low in iron as possible. However, we would have the same requirements as in #2, that we would require the ability to purchase both the current and replacement product simultaneously in order to make a gradual diet change. If the animals do not consume the new diet and cannot be switched to the new product, we would require the option of continuing to purchase the old products. However, there is a health benefit to switching to this product, supporting the diet change.

Current product: Reliable Protein Products Low-Iron Softbill diet ($31.98/bag; maximum dietary iron 120 ppm). Replacement product: Zupreem Avian Maintenance ($14.20/bag; dietary iron <80 ppm).

4. For the following products, we have no specific need to stay with one product or vendor, provided that the product is processed, stored, and shipped in an appropriate manner and product quality is comparable to previous products. We would accept replacement products for these food items.

scratch grains (corn/seed mix)

parrot seed mix

finch seed mix

lite formula dog food

sunflower seeds

peanut, raw, in shell

bran

corn, cracked

oats, rolled

grit

oyster shell

5. The vendor providing many of these replacement products has not, in the past, provided delivery to the zoo, as our current vendor does. We would need to confirm that these replacement products would be delivered to the zoo commissary as outlined in the food contract, without additional costs.

Thank you for your attention and consideration.
